

ABSTRACT

Description of the invention

The invention relates to a signal processing unit, in particular for a telecommunication system, comprising means for digital signal processing, means for storage of data and control means, whereby the means for digital signal processing and the control means are connected to each other by means of serial time multiplex connections.

A signal processing unit with particularly wide applications, in particular for signal processing tasks in digital communication systems, is thus achieved.